each state represented in the convention.
Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, read the first paper on the topic. "State and Parochial schools, is union between them impossible!" In opening his speech he declared his loyalty to the constitution and said he upheld the parish school, but would have all schools state schools; the imparting of instruction to the child was primarily the function of the parent. The state intervenes whenever the family could or would not do the work needed. He unreservedly favored state have making instruction venes whenever the family could or would not do the work needed. He unreservedly favored state laws making instruction compulsory. Instruction was so much needed by each citizen for his own sake and for that of society that the father who neglected to provide for his child's instructions sinned against society and it behoved the state to punish him. Of course, he said, the parent epjoyed the right to educate his child in a manner suitable to himself, provided always that the education given in this manner sufficed for the ulterior duties of the child toward himself and society. The compulsory laws recently enserted in certain states of the union were objectionable only in a few of their individual clauses. The state school, he said, tended to the elimination of religion from the minds and heartd of theyouth of the country. This, he said, was his grievance against the state schools of to-day, there could be no religious teaching where the principle of non-sectarianism rules. It followed, then, that the child would grow up in the belief that religion was of minor importance, and religious indifference would be his creed. The state need not teach religion, but for the sake of its people, and for its own sake, it should facilitate and permit the action of the church, but it hindered this action. As a solution of this difficulty, he would permeate the regular state schools with the religion do the majority of the children of the land, be it as Protestant as Protestantism could be, and would do as they do in England—pay for secular instruction given in words of commendation by President George Q. always revive a dying fire, and, unlike the few drops of coal oil which servants are so fond of using and which have caused so many sad accidents, is perfectly safe. To mend a very large hole in socks or woven underwear, tack a piece of strong net over the aperture and darn over it. Thus mended the garment will be stronger than when new and look far neater than if darned in the ordinary way. To keep the bright green color of summer cabbage and some other vegetables, boil fast in plenty of water in which has been dissolved a piece of washing soda the size of two peas. Cover until the water boils and then take off the lid. If the steam is shut in, the cabbage will be yellow and unsightly. Fasten one of the cheap threefold towel racks securely to the kitchen wall near the stove, and it will serve to hang your jelly bag, which should be provided with four loops of strong tape in place of the usual strings. Slip the two loops opposite each other on the outer arms of the rail and the alternate ones on the middle arm. You will find it far more convenient than tying bag to the backs or legs of chairs.
